Last view days have been surreal it's somewhere in between the movies I am Legend and 13 Hours.

Every city and village is like the movie Red Dawn... blockades made with sandbags, tires, cement blocks, Huge Metal spikes to stop tanks, small razor nails to stop trucks.

Posts with military and militia. Guarding big cities and small villages.

{You can't take pictures of any military stops}

Young teenagers to 80 year olds with any weapon they can find AK47 to Old broken down hunting rifles.

Even woman are at some of the posts with weapons and Walkie Talkies.

From combat knives to kitchen knives...

Checking your passport every few miles.

With a guy ready to fire at you for no reason. You show your hands to not make any tensions worse.

I've had no problems being American 🇺🇸 except for the shock an American is in an Ukrainian village.

As Russians have been changing into civilian clothes trying to get behind lines.

We made a run out of Kiev and we passed 2 coveys going in the same direction as us.

We arrived in a small village and people were so nice. We stayed in a home like in the 1900s we had no water - internet-toilet was outside outhouse.

Most campsites in America 🇺🇸 were better than this. But we were so grateful and we had blankets and food.

Emotions are high as you see men with guns protecting their country.

And woman in tears not knowing what to do and if they will ever see there loved ones again.

Kate still terrified not having 5 year old Olivia as her ex still hasn't given her back, but we realized if we stay in Kiev she will have no mother.

Most people left behind everything in their homes including me and who knows if we ever get back again.

All the famous quotes on war are true!

My version of a quote!

It's A living Hell!
